Paul and Louise Bernheimer devoted their lives to collecting and dealing in antiques. Paul was the scion of the family that founded the world-famous Bernheimerhaus on Lenbachplatz in Munich, Germany, in 1864. By 1900, the Bernheimers had become official purveyors to the Court of Bavaria. Their clients included members of the European aristocracy and American magnates. Louise came to antiques, and to the business, via her professional training as a costume designer. After leaving Germany in 1939, forced into exile by the Nazis, the Bernheimers re-established themselves in the States. They eventually ran antiques companies in Boston, Cambridge, and Cape Cod. In addition to their own businesses, they frequently exhibited their rare wares in antiques shows held in various U.S. cities.
