“I’m ready for my closeup...”

Folk art copy of a well-known painting done by Benamine West, 1770 depicting the fatal wounding of General James Wolf during the battle of Quebec between the French and the English. The war began on September 13, 1759. The outcome of the seven year's war was the ousting of France in the colonies and the supremacy of Britain in the colonies. The bitterness held by the French was the reason for their alliance with the colonies during the revolutionary war.

An extremely rare pair of one drawer stands in original condition from the North Shore. Representative of an important single owner collection that we will be exhibiting at Wallace Hall, January 19 -21, 2018, Park Avenue at 84th Street.
